reaction from the audience

“Friday I saw Oh Amor Natural,
I want to say 'thank you', because once again I came out of one of your performances feeling somewhat healed, even though I don't know exactly what exactly “gets healed”, still, going through that process, the process that takes place during such a timeless hour, of initially sitting uncomfortably watching, intimidated by the raw longing, the raw desire, of people who are themselves learning to handle it and remain prey to it, who must act it out by putting themselves on display, which provokes the urge to look away, to reject, to judge, and that helpless frustration, that intimidation, which leads to the decision to have to open up, to go along with the characters on stage yet to stay near each other, yet to get to know each other, still dance, euphoria, ecstasy, pleasure, there is nothing as natural as love, but nothing that requires as much culture as love, it 'isn't' just there, it has to 'become'

thank you, for making me feel that, that whatever there is, it always has to become that intimidation is, and intimacy can become.”
